

Creative Process

A creative process guides the development of ideas and original work. Creative processes include inquiry, questioning, research, investigation, generating ideas and solutions, testing and discussing ideas and solutions, refining work as part of a creative community, and reflecting on the process and product. Through creative processes, students use their knowledge and skills flexibly to develop an original voice and vision for a variety of theatre roles including actor, playwright, performer, director, theatre technician, and producer.

Critical Thinking and Communication

Students analyze theatrical works and dramatic literature when they describe works using appropriate vocabulary, classify properties of works in a variety of ways, compare and contrast aspects of theatrical works, and recognize properties and characteristics. Students interpret the work of self and others for messages and meaning. Evaluating the work of self and others allows students to deeply apply content knowledge and to develop informed responses. Students recognize and articulate personal attitudes, preferences, and opinions regarding theatrical works. Students examine their opinions, attitudes, and beliefs, and recognize the value of learning about diverse responses of others.

Collaboration and communication skills for theatre arts include developing as an ensemble, compromise, sharing responsibility, teamwork, active listening, recognizing and effectively using verbal and nonverbal cues, presenting work and ideas, and providing and receiving constructive feedback.
